Once upon a time, there was a little bird named Bird who didn't know how to read. He was embarrassed about it, but he couldn't help it. He just didn't understand the words on the page.

One day, Bird was playing in the forest when he saw a group of birds singing. He wanted to join in, but he didn't know the words to the song. He felt sad and left out.

Just then, a wise old owl flew down and asked Bird why he was so sad. Bird told the owl that he didn't know how to read and that he couldn't sing the song with the other birds.

The owl smiled and said, "Don't worry, Bird. I can teach you how to read." And so, the owl began to teach Bird the alphabet. Bird was a quick learner, and soon he was able to sound out words.

One day, Bird was reading a book when he came across a word he didn't know. He asked the owl what it meant, and the owl told him. Bird was so excited that he could finally understand the words on the page.

Bird loved to read. He read every book he could get his hands on. He learned about different animals, different countries, and different cultures. Reading opened up a whole new world for Bird.

One day, Bird was reading a book about a hero who saved the day. Bird was so inspired by the story that he decided he wanted to be a hero too.

Bird went on to have many adventures. He saved a baby bird from a cat, he helped a lost dog find its way home, and he even stopped a group of bullies from picking on a smaller bird.

Bird became a hero because he was brave, kind, and compassionate. But he also became a hero because he could read. Reading gave Bird the knowledge and the inspiration to make a difference in the world.

If you want to be a hero, learn to read. Reading will open up a whole new world for you. It will give you the knowledge and the inspiration to make a difference in the world.
