Frantisek Fajtl was a young man when World War II broke out. He quickly joined the fight against the Nazis, flying dangerous missions over occupied Czechoslovakia. But Fajtl was not alone in his endeavors. He had a constant companion by his side: Jerry, a small, brown terrier who had become his devoted aircrew dog.

Jerry was more than just a pet to Fajtl. He was a loyal friend and a source of comfort during the long and perilous missions. Jerry would often sit in the cockpit with Fajtl, his tail wagging furiously as they soared through the skies. Together, Fajtl and Jerry faced countless dangers. They were shot at by enemy fighters, forced to bail out over hostile territory, and even crash-landed in a remote forest. But through it all, their bond only grew stronger.
