

Where Have You Gone Vince Coleman Ernie Broglio John Tudor And Other Cardinals

By Curt Smith

In the annals of baseball history, the St. Louis Cardinals stand as one of the most storied and successful franchises in the game. Over the years, the Cardinals have been home to some of the greatest players to ever grace the diamond, including Hall of Famers like Stan Musial, Bob Gibson, and Ozzie Smith.

But for every Hall of Famer, there are countless other players who have made their mark on the Cardinals organization. These are the players who may not have reached the heights of stardom, but who nonetheless played a vital role in the team's success.

Vince Coleman

Vince Coleman was one of the most exciting players to ever wear a Cardinals uniform. A speedy outfielder with a knack for getting on base, Coleman was a key member of the Cardinals' World Series championship team in 1982.

Coleman was born in Jacksonville, Florida, in 1961. He was a star athlete in high school, and he was drafted by the Cardinals in the first round of the 1979 MLB Draft.

Coleman made his MLB debut with the Cardinals in 1981. He quickly became a fan favorite, thanks to his speed and his ability to get on base. In 1985, Coleman stole 110 bases, a Cardinals record that still stands today.

Coleman was also a key member of the Cardinals' World Series championship team in 1982. He batted .333 in the World Series, and he scored the winning run in Game 7.

Coleman played for the Cardinals until 1989. He then played for the New York Mets, the Seattle Mariners, and the Kansas City Royals before retiring in 1997.

Ernie Broglio

Ernie Broglio was one of the hardest-throwing pitchers in baseball during the 1950s and 1960s. He was a key member of the Cardinals' World Series championship team in 1964.

Broglio was born in San Francisco, California, in 1935. He was a star athlete in high school, and he was drafted by the Cardinals in the first round of the 1953 MLB Draft.

Broglio made his MLB debut with the Cardinals in 1957. He quickly became one of the best pitchers in the National League. In 1960, he won 21 games for the Cardinals, and he finished second in the NL Cy Young Award voting.

Broglio was also a key member of the Cardinals' World Series championship team in 1964. He pitched a complete game in Game 7 of the World Series, and he earned the win.

Broglio played for the Cardinals until 1965. He then played for the Chicago Cubs, the Atlanta Braves, and the St. Louis Browns before retiring in 1970.

John Tudor

John Tudor was a left-handed pitcher who helped the Cardinals win the World Series in 1982. He was a key member of the Cardinals' rotation, and he was known for his pinpoint control and his ability to get ground balls.

Tudor was born in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1954. He was a star athlete in high school, and he was drafted by the Cardinals in the first round of the 1974 MLB Draft.

Tudor made his MLB debut with the Cardinals in 1979. He quickly became one of the best pitchers in the National League. In 1982, he won 21 games for the Cardinals, and he finished third in the NL Cy Young Award voting.

Tudor was also a key member of the Cardinals' World Series championship team in 1982. He pitched a complete game in Game 5 of the World Series, and he earned the win.

Tudor played for the Cardinals until 1988. He then played for the Los Angeles Dodgers, the San Diego Padres, and the Oakland Athletics before retiring in 1990.

These are just a few of the many players profiled in Curt Smith's book, Where Have You Gone Vince Coleman Ernie Broglio John Tudor And Other Cardinals. Smith's book is a must-read for any fan of the St. Louis Cardinals.
